TITLE: Bonding Glass Wafers ⓘ

Requesting Lab/Division/Group: Physical Measurements Lab/Time and Frequency Division/ Atomic Devices & Instrumentation Group
NB688000-26-02216

General Statement of Need ⓘ

The National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) is the US National Metrology Institute (NMI) responsible for establishing standards along with advancing measurement science, standards, and technology. The Atomic Devices and Instrumentation Group is funded and engaged in developing microfabricated cells using Rydberg atoms for both electrical metrology and radio frequency sensing. To ensure the performance of the cells, passivated surfaces with specific coatings are required. The quality of the coating can be only preserved at a temperature that is below the bonding temperature of the standard process so special glass wafers are needed to achieve lower bonding temperature for the cell fabrication. The acquisition will enable NIST researchers to develop and fabricate high performance cells and enhance current capabilities and meet current research obligations by procuring special glass material/wafers that support low temperature bonding with thermal expansion coefficient similar to Si.
