BAA0001-22, dated June 13, 2022, is hereby amended as follows:

1. Area of Interest Q. Human—Machine Teaming Technologies for Document Services Management, is hereby removed and incorporated into Area of Interest O. Human-Machine Teaming for the following DLA operational organizations – Disposition Services Warehouse Management, Document Services Management.

REMOVE:

Q. Human—Machine Teaming Technologies for Document Services Management

Response must focus on various ways to automate repetitive and manual labor tasks in various printing stations and provide data on improved performance to reduce cost, increase productivity, and provide predictable budgeting. The labor-saving devices also provide proactive monitoring to minimize downtime and ensure continuity of print fleet operations. Solutions include intelligent power and printing workflow management where print job routing are automatically directed to the most suitable machine across different Document Services printing shops. Optimizing print infrastructure also includes intelligent power management features that reduce energy costs without compromising productivity. Efforts may also include transition of R&D Projects as outlined in Section, B.10 Research and Development Project Transition Information.

REPLACE:

O. Human-Machine Teaming for the following DLA operational organizations – Disposition Services Warehouse Management, Document Services Management

Disposition Services Warehouse Management - Response must focus on various ways to help ensure worker's safety, efficiencies, and effectiveness in disposition warehouses by automating repetitive and mundane tasks and provide data on improved performance. The labor-saving devices must demonstrate a significant increase in improving disposal efficiencies, automated material transport within the warehouse, tracking and tracing of returned materials, the rate of palletizing and depalletizing of large containers and off-loading of trucks. The technology must help prevent overexertion among human workers involved in lifting, moving, bending, stooping and synchronize well with human centered activities and business processes. Solutions must work autonomously in cleaning and vacuuming floors while neatly avoiding walls and obstacles. The technology must enable production efficiency simulations that reduce disorganization and unnecessary complexity in disposition warehouse planning and operations. Efforts may also include transition of R&D Projects as outlined in Section, B.10 Research and Development Project Transition Information
